The J. D. Warren Mfg. Co., Masonic Temple, Chicago, have just completed two designs of Catalogue Cabinets which appeal to every Hardware dealer in the country, as many merchants are desirous of saving all valuable printed matter that reaches them, and which they frequently discard for want of a suitable place in which to keep it for immediate reference. constructed. In their circular they note its many conveniences, and say: "In the study of design and arrangement of these Cabinets, an incident occurred that greatly aided us through a call at another office desiring a cabinet that would relieve the desk, its top, its writing space, its drawers, the office table, the shelves and the floor from a variety of miscellaneous printed matter, circulars, price lists, periodicals, catalogues, letter heads, envelopes, and stationery of all descriptions, electrotypes, small samples, etc., a cabinet to be so constructed that there would be suitable space for all, each separate, so that any information can be quickly obtained or article found. Everything was "corraled," separated into bunches and correct space allotted to each. The result was a cabinet originated from actual necessity, forming one that responds in a most practical way to the daily demands for information through its variety of arrangement, thus making it desirable for every office. The service it renders will reimburse the investment in a short time, virtually making the purchase a loan for a brief period."
